BOY SCOUT BUILDS AIR CAMPING SHELTER

You might say that air camping has been just a normal way of life for 13-year-old James Nebrig of Prescott, Arizona. James began air camping with his parents when he was just 3 years old.

Six years ago, James was stuck in a small tent with his parents waiting out a late-September monsoon downburst at the Payson Airport air campground with other members of their Grumman Type Club when he first got the idea that the air campground needed a picnic/sun shelter so that folks wouldn't be stuck in their tents during storms.

In the six years that have followed, the idea of a picnic shelter for the KPAN air campground grew from just wishful thinking to a full-on plan of action for the now 13-year-old. James is a member of the Boy Scouts of America as a Life Scout, one rank away from Eagle Scout.

To obtain the rank of Eagle, scouts are required to complete a service project that benefits a non profit or governmental agency. When it came time to think of a service project, one idea immediately came to mind: build a shelter for the air campers at the Payson Airport. With encouragement from his parents, the Payson Airport and the city of Payson, James located plans on the Internet and began planning the shelter. James raised approximately $6,000 needed to build the shelter and in January and February, supervised an all-volunteer crew in building the shelter.

Join James, the Arizona Pilots Association and R.A.F. on Saturday, May 16 at a fly-in dinner and air camping weekend at KPAN. For more details, contact James at james.nebrig@hotmail.com
