Apache Junction Districts May Sell $800 Million in Infrastructure Bonds

Two community facilities districts in the southern portion of Apache Junction may sell up to $400 million in general obligation bonds for infrastructure.

The boards for Superstition Vistas Community Facilities District Nos. 1 and 2 voted to approve resolutions to adopt the results of district bond elections held February 2nd.

The districts cover the master-planned communities for D.R. Horton and Brookfield Residential that will have approximately 10,500 residences when built out.

The bonds will be repaid by SVCDF residents through a property tax. SVCDF No. 1 residents can expect to pay $3.30 per $100 of assessed value, while SVCDF No.2 residents will see a rate of $3.85. The difference is due to the projected infrastructure needs and costs for each district. (Source)

What NOT to write in a cover letter

Imagine you are a proposal reviewer. Your inbox is filling up, about to runneth over. Your phone is getting overheated because of the fire alarm calls you are getting. And you have 20 proposals to review by tomorrow morning. Adding to your overwhelm is that your (spouse, partner, teenager, parent, toddler) needs you tonight to (cook dinner, go to the store, go to a sports event, come for a visit, take them to the park). It is going to be a long night.

You need help reviewing those proposals. Something to make it easy to score and feel confident you are making a good shortlist or selection choice. Most firms write blah-blah-blah letters that waste your precious time.

Back to reality. As a consultant, you want to write a strong proposal that sets your company up for the win. You have done your research, you have named your team members, you have answered all the questions, and filled out all the required forms. Now it is time to write that cover letter.

Do not pull out the letter from the last proposal. Instead, put the spotlight on your understanding, team, experience, and approach to show that you have the qualifications and expertise they need. Hook the reader so they can’t help but keep reading.

Do not use the following phrases:

1. Thank you for the opportunity to submit. Never start the letter with this or any version of it. Start with the challenge that your reader is facing so they know that you are thinking about them. Your proposal should lay out the plan to help them solve their challenges. Do not be trite, stale, or boring.

2. We are proud of our history of…. Nobody cares about your history. Proposal readers care about their project, and what you can do for them. They care about your relevant experience and the qualifications of your team. Give them an example of a similar project and name the key team players that will deliver project success. That is what they want to know.

3. We are committed to providing exceptional client-service for a long-term success. Everybody says this because it means that the client will come back to you again and again. It sounds selfish. Exceptional client service is the baseline. Do the job well or you will not work for the client again. What they want is exceptional service because they have project challenges to overcome. Write about how you will communicate with the client to avoid confusion and conflict, so the project proceeds without budget busts or delays.

4. Please call me with questions. Do not leave it up to your reader to call you. Make a promise to follow up in a few days, and then call them to see if they have any questions or concerns. If the next step is an interview, then tell them that you are excited to share more insights in an interview. Get them excited to talk with you, too.

5. We, we, we… Review recent cover letters and highlight how many times you write “we,” “us,” “our,” or your company name. Then mark how many times you mention the client, or use “you.” When you talk about your firm and rarely mention the client, you are “we-we-ing” all over them. That is not a good thing.

Professionals who write succinct and clear cover letters that show they understand the project, have the qualified team, bring relevant expertise, and have an approach for project success are a proposal reader’s dream. Avoid these stale phrases and keep your cover letters to the point. Give your readers a reason to happily turn the page and score your proposal with high marks.
Two Arizona Ports of Entry Projects Get Infrastructure Funds

By U.S. General Services Administration

The Biden Administration and the U.S. General Services Administration have announced major land port modernization and construction projects funded through the Bipartisan Infrastructure Law. The law includes $3.4 billion for GSA to build and modernize land ports of entry on the country’s northern and southern borders.

The investments will improve commerce and trade, create construction jobs and incorporate new sustainability features.

Billions of dollars in goods and services pass through U.S. land ports every day. Commercial capacity at many land ports is limited by outdated infrastructure, resulting in long lines and wait times for commercial traffic. Most of the 26 major modernization projects that will be funded through the law have elements that will enhance commercial processing capabilities.

These projects will also support U.S. Customs and Border Protection.

The $3.4 billion in direct spending by GSA is estimated to support, on average, nearly 6,000 annual jobs over the next eight years and add $3.23 billion in total labor income across the United States.

Arizona port modernization projects that will move forward under the plan include (estimates subject to change):

- More than $200 million for a new commercial port in Douglas, Arizona to better facilitate the crossing of commercial goods, produce, and equipment as well as to act as a regional economic engine.
- More than $115 million to complete the modernization of the San Luis I Land Port of Entry in San Luis, Arizona, an important port for the U.S. food industry and related supply chains. (Source)
MAG Presses Case for Proposition 400 Tax Renewal

Maricopa Association of Governments Executive Director Eric Anderson made the case for renewing the Proposition 400 transportation tax during an appearance at a West Valley Commercial Real Estate Group meeting held by Phoenix West Commercial LLC.

The tax was originally instituted in 1985 and has been responsible for much of the area’s highway development, including the Loop 101 and Loop 202 freeways. Proposition 400, the current iteration of the tax, is set to expire in 2025 and must be renewed by voters if it is to continue in place.

MAG approved its 2050 regional transportation plan in December and plans to place the half-cent sales tax renewal on the 2022 ballot.

Many of the projects that could benefit from the renewal are centered in the West Valley and Loop 303 freeway. These other project timelines could be sped up with funds provided through the $1 trillion transportation bill the U.S. Senate passed in August.

Among the projects that would be funded through a Proposition 400 tax renewal are:

- Widening Interstate 10 from State Route 85 to Verrado Way,
- New traffic interchanges on Loop 303,
- Adding lanes to Loop 101 from 75th Avenue to I-17,
- A new HOV ramp interchange on Loop 101 at I-10,
- An extension of Loop 303 from Van Buren Street to MC 85,
- Phase I of SR 30, connecting Loop 303 and Loop 202.

Other projects still being planned include multiple improvements to I-10, I-17, Loop 101 and US 60. (Source)
